IRS NOTICES

Why the IRS sends correspondence to taxpayers and the importance of responding timely.

Why?

The IRS sends letters and/or notices to taxpayers to:

- Advise the taxpayer of an error on their return.
- Question items on their return.
- Ask for more information.
- Request payment.

Common Notices

Math Error

These notices are not always bad. They may:

- Notify you that a math error was made on your tax return.
- Indicate whether you have a refund or if you owe the IRS.

Request For Additional Information

These notices are usually neutral. They may:

- Request information to assist with processing your tax return.
- Request substantiation of items claimed on your tax return.

Balance Due

These notices request payment.

- You may already be aware of the balance due from a filed tax return.
- The IRS may have determined that you have an additional balance due.
- Balance due may be the result of further action taken by the IRS including interest and penalty.
- Multiple options for making payment should be included with the notice.

Automated Under-Reporter (CP-2000)

These computer generated notices:

- Inform you that the income reported on your return does not match the income reported to the IRS by others (employer, bank, etc.)
- Difference in amounts reported could result in a reduced refund or increase in balance due.
- Notice may be INCORRECT; be sure to compare the information with your return and respond timely if an error is discovered.

ALWAYS...

Open mail from the IRS - ignoring it does not make the situation go away and may make it worse.

Examination

Notices provide the status of your account and:

- Inform you that the IRS has selected your return to be audited.
- Request information needed to complete the examination.
- Important to respond timely.

Automated Collection System

These notices should be high priority.

- Usually sent because you have not responded to prior notices sent by the IRS.
- Defaulted on a payment agreement established with the IRS.
- RESPOND IMMEDIATELY
  - Lack of response usually results in the IRS assessing a levy on your income and/or lien on your assets.
